Koch as Armitage.

Lovers of Meredith Nicholson's novels, and they number up to a very respectable army, are waiting with the keenest interest, the dramatization of "The Port of Missing Men," which is to be presented here this season by Messrs. Rowland and Gaskill with Hugo B. Koch in the part of the hero, John Armitage. The play that has been made from the Nicholson novel, is in four acts, by Edward E. Rose, who has in his time transplanted some of the most popular novels from the book to the stage. With a view of accuracy and that every opportunity might be given the dramatization, it was presented during the season just closed, and was received by large audiences at the Croan and National theatres, Chicago, with unbounded enthusiasm. Chicago critics agreed unanimously that the part of John Armitage gave Mr. Koch one of the best opportunities ever afforded an actor, even surpassing that other role of Bates in "The House of a Thousand Candles," in which he toured the country last season with unparalleled success. Messrs. Rowland and Gaskill have given "The Port of Missing Men" a most charming scenic equipment, each set being painted from photographs taken in the exact spots where the action is laid. Mr. Koch will appear in "The Port of Missing Men" at the Temple theatre Tuesday, April 18. Curtain promptly at 8:30.

Two Fire Alarms.

During the fierce wind and dust storm of yesterday afternoon, two fire alarms were sounded.

The first was turned in from Clyde Scott's home, but this fire was extinguished before the arrival of the department. Inconsiderable damage.

The second came from the pest house of the northwest outskirts of the city. The entire department turned out in battle array in the blinding dust, but as before, their services were not required, and the damage negligible.

Some burning papers in rear of the Clapp store was another incident of the afternoon.

But the state of the weather made them both thrillers.
